No man in this State has a larger or more devoted following. The enthusiasm greets Mr. Hughes, and in thickly populated cities the crowds are much larger. Of course, there is much curiosity to see Mr. Hearst, the man who has advertised himself widely, but this does not explain the almost hysterical enthusiasm. It cannot be disputed that a large pro portion of the small shopkeepers, clerks, and the members of the labor unions regard him as a second Moses, who is going to lead them out of the wilderness of their troubles. These men are sincere in their devotion, and no amount of ment on the other side will keep them
